Jean's Story

Jean was born in 1962 in a small town in Iowa. She was the youngest of six children. Jean's parents were both farmers, and they worked hard to provide for their family.

When Jean was born, her parents were shocked to see that she was missing teeth and hair. They took her to the doctor, and they were told that she had ectodermal dysplasia. The doctor said that Jean would have to face many challenges in her life, but her parents were determined to give her the best life possible.

Jean grew up in a loving and supportive home. Her parents and siblings always treated her like a normal child. They never made her feel different or ashamed of her disorder.

Jean attended school like other children, but she often felt isolated. She was teased and bullied by other children because of her appearance. However, Jean never let the bullies get to her. She always held her head high and refused to let them define her.

After graduating from high school, Jean went on to college. She earned a degree in social work, and she now works as a counselor for children with disabilities.

Jean is passionate about helping others. She volunteers her time at a local hospital, and she is a member of several organizations that support children with disabilities.
