The Murrays were a powerful clan in the Scottish Highlands for centuries. They were known for their bravery and their skill in battle. In the 10th century, they were led by a great warrior named Findláech mac Ruaidrí, who was known as the Highland Conqueror.

Findláech was born in 920 AD in the village of Dulnain Bridge, Inverness-shire. He was the son of Ruaidrí mac Murchadh, the chief of the Clan Murray. Findláech was a skilled warrior from a young age, and he quickly rose through the ranks of the clan. He became chief of the Clan Murray in 954 AD.

As chief of the Clan Murray, Findláech led his people in a number of successful campaigns against their rivals. He expanded the clan's territory and increased its power. Findláech was also a skilled diplomat, and he was able to form alliances with other clans, including the Clan Macpherson and the Clan Chattan.

In 962 AD, Findláech led the Clan Murray in a major battle against the Clan Comyn. The battle was fought at the Battle of Blair Athol, and it ended in a victory for the Clan Murray. Findláech's victory at Blair Athol made him one of the most powerful chiefs in the Highlands.

Findláech continued to lead the Clan Murray in a number of successful campaigns throughout his lifetime. He died in 995 AD at the age of 75. He was succeeded by his son, Maol Muire mac Findláech, who continued the clan's tradition of military success.

The Murrays remained a powerful clan in the Scottish Highlands for centuries. They played a major role in the Scottish Wars of Independence and the Jacobite Risings. The clan also produced a number of notable leaders, including the Dukes of Atholl and the Earls of Dunmore.
