

How America Can Avoid War, Stay Strong, and Keep the Peace: Council on Foreign Relations

The Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) has released a new report, "How America Can Avoid War, Stay Strong, and Keep the Peace." The report argues that the United States must adopt a new grand strategy to avoid war, maintain its strength, and preserve the peace. The report's authors identify four key pillars of this new grand strategy:

1. Diplomacy: The United States must use diplomacy to resolve conflicts peacefully and prevent them from escalating into war.
2. Defense: The United States must maintain a strong military to deter potential aggressors and defend its interests.
3. Economic statecraft: The United States must use its economic power to promote its interests and values abroad.

4. Values promotion: The United States must promote its values, such as democracy, human rights, and the rule of law, around the world.

The CFR report argues that the United States must adopt this new grand strategy in order to avoid war, maintain its strength, and preserve the peace. The report's authors warn that the United States is facing a number of challenges that could lead to war, including the rise of China, the spread of nuclear weapons, and the growing threat of terrorism. They argue that the United States must adopt a new grand strategy to address these challenges and avoid the dangers of war.

The CFR report is a valuable contribution to the debate on how the United States can avoid war, maintain its strength, and preserve the peace. The report's authors provide a clear and concise analysis of the challenges facing the United States and offer a number of concrete recommendations for how the United States can address these challenges. The report is a must-read for anyone interested in the future of American foreign policy.
