Matte Black is an experimental electronic music producer known for his dark and atmospheric soundscapes. His latest album, Dissociative Identity Disorder Year, is a deeply personal exploration of mental illness, trauma, and identity.

The album title refers to the dissociative identity disorder (DID) that Matte Black was diagnosed with in 2018. DID is a mental illness in which a person has two or more distinct identities or personality states that take control of the body at different times. Matte Black has said that he created Dissociative Identity Disorder Year as a way to process his experiences with DID and to help others who may be struggling with the disorder.

The album is a sonic journey through the complex and often frightening world of DID. The tracks are dark and atmospheric, featuring a mix of electronic beats, industrial noise, and distorted vocals. Matte Black's lyrics are often cryptic and abstract, but they hint at the pain and confusion that he has experienced.

Dissociative Identity Disorder Year is a challenging album, but it is also a powerful and moving one. Matte Black's music is a raw and honest expression of the human experience, and it is sure to resonate with anyone who has ever struggled with mental illness.
