

The Highland Wolf: The Murrays of Atholl, 15th Century Clan Warriors of Scotland

The Murrays of Atholl were a powerful Highland clan who played a major role in Scottish history. They were known for their ferocity and bravery, and were often called upon to fight in the service of the Scottish Crown.

The Murrays were descended from the ancient Pictish tribe of the Maeatae, who inhabited the area around Loch Tay in central Scotland. The first recorded member of the clan was Gille Críst mac Maíl Muire, who was granted the lands of Atholl by King Malcolm IV in the 12th century.

The Murrays quickly rose to prominence in the Highlands, and by the 15th century they were one of the most powerful clans in Scotland. They were led by a series of strong chiefs, including Andrew Murray, the first Earl of Atholl, who played a major role in the Scottish Wars of Independence.
