This comprehensive travel guide will provide you with everything you need to know to plan your trip to Washington, D.C. and explore the city using public transportation. We'll cover the best ways to get around, where to stay, what to see and do, and how to save money on your trip.

Getting Around Washington, D.C. by Public Transportation

The Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (WMATA) operates the public transportation system in Washington, D.C. and the surrounding suburbs. The system includes six Metrorail lines, hundreds of bus routes, and several commuter rail lines.

The Metrorail is the fastest and most convenient way to get around the city. The trains run frequently and reliably, and they can take you to all of the major tourist destinations in Washington, D.C.

To ride the Metrorail, you will need to purchase a SmarTrip card. SmarTrip cards can be purchased at any Metrorail station or at many retail locations throughout the city. You can add value to your SmarTrip card at any fare vending machine or at a customer service window.

Once you have a SmarTrip card, you can simply tap it on the fare reader at the entrance to the Metrorail station. The fare will be automatically deducted from your card. You can also use your SmarTrip card to ride buses and commuter rail trains.

In addition to the Metrorail, there are also several bus routes that serve Washington, D.C. Buses are a good option for getting to places that are not served by the Metrorail, such as the National Mall and the Smithsonian museums.

To ride the bus, you will need to have exact change. You can also purchase a SmarTrip card and use it to pay your fare on the bus.

If you are planning on using public transportation extensively during your trip to Washington, D.C., you may want to consider purchasing a weekly or monthly pass. Passes can be purchased at any Metrorail station or at a customer service window.

Where to Stay in Washington, D.C.

There are many great places to stay in Washington, D.C., but if you are planning on using public transportation to get around, you will want to choose a hotel that is located near a Metrorail station.
